

Match Structure

After each bout, reset by placing both wrestler cards so that their arrows point at the middle space on the balance card.

Whoever won the previous bout should place their wrestler card gold side up. The other player should place their wrestler card white side up.

Give the advantage card to whoever lost the previous bout.

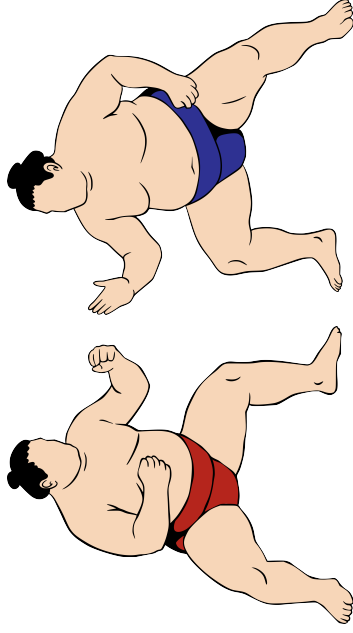

To win the match, you must win two consecutive bouts. That is, you must win while your wrestler card is gold side up.

Design: Michael Purcell
Contact: mike@armiger.games

Version 0.1

Version 0.1

相撲 SUMO

Designed by Michael Purcell

Overview

相撲 (SUMO) is an 18-card sumo wrestling game for two players. It can be played in about fifteen minutes.

During the game, you will try to throw your opponent off balance before they can do the same to you. To do so, you will simultaneously play cards, each of which will affect both wrestlers balance.

You will compete in a match that consists of a series of bouts. To win the match, you must win two consecutive bouts.

Components

- 18 cards
 - 14 move cards
 - 2 wrestler cards
 - 1 balance card
 - 1 advantage card

Losing Your Balance

If your wrestler moves off of the balance card, then you lose your balance. If your lose your balance, but your opponent does not, then you lose the bout.

Advantage

If both wrestlers lose their balance at the same time, the player with the advantage wins the bout. The advantage card is used to indicate who has the advantage.

Each player has one move card (the 0/0 card) that has a gold border. When you play this move card, you may take the advantage card from your opponent.

If both players play their gold-bordered move cards at the same time, then whoever has the advantage card retains it.

Playing Move Cards

When both players are ready, reveal your move cards by turning them face up so that different ends point at each player.

Be careful about how you reveal your move card. Flipping a move card along its short edge is not equivalent to flipping it along its long edge.

Adjusting the Wrestlers' Balance

Move your wrestler according to the colored numbers on the ends of both move cards that are pointed at you.

A number's color indicates direction. Move towards the end of the balance card that matches the number's color.

A number's magnitude indicates distance. Move a number of spaces on the balance card equal to the number's magnitude.

Set Up

1. Decide who will play as red and who will play as blue.
2. Give each player the wrestler card and the move cards of their color.
3. Position the balance card such that each player is sitting near the side of their opponent's color. That is, the red player should be seated near the blue side of the balance card and vice versa.
4. Place your wrestler card, white side up, with the arrow pointing at the middle space on the balance card. The two wrestler cards should be placed on opposite sides of the balance card.
5. Place the advantage card to one side.

Prelude

Before the first bout of the match, you will perform a ring-entering ceremony. During this ceremony, you will choose the initial ordering of your move cards and show that ordering to your opponent.

Arrange your move cards face down in a single row in front of you. The leftmost card will be the topmost card of your starting draw deck during the subsequent match while the rightmost card will be the bottommost card of that deck.

Whoever decides upon their ordering first should claim the advantage card and will start the match with the advantage.

When both players have decided on their ordering, turn your cards face up. Ensure your opponent has time to study your chosen ordering. Then, gather your cards (without reordering them) and place them face down to form your draw deck.

Gameplay

A bout plays out over a series of rounds. Each round, you will simultaneously select move cards, play those cards, and adjust the balance of both wrestlers.

A bout ends when either wrestler loses their balance. That wrestler loses the bout. If both wrestlers lose their balance at the same time, then whoever currently has the advantage wins the bout.

Selecting Move Cards

If your draw pile is empty, collect your pile of previously-played move cards without reordering them, then turn the entire pile face down to form a new draw deck.

Draw cards from your draw pile until you have two move cards in your hand. Then, choose one move card from your hand and place it face down in front of you.